GENERAL NEWS

The Hull Murder.

NEW YORK, July 15.—The crowds around the general sessions building, where the trial of Chastine Cox for the murder of Mrs. Jane Hull is to be held, was even greater than yesterday. Chambers street, from Center street to the court house, was filled with loiterers from an early hour, anxious to catch a glimpse of the murderer on his way from the prison to the court room. Around the city prison, also, a number of persons waited to see the procession as it turned the corner. The handcuffed prisoner and the officers entered the street car, and the crowd ran after them, but soon gave up the chase. Cox appeared relieved when he succeeded in getting in the court room. He asked for a glass of water, and drank it eagerly. The corridors were crowded with people.

The Buford Trial.

OWENTON, July 15.—Among the witnesses for the defense this morning was Dr. Bell of Louisville, who was examined as an expert. He testified that he would not hesitate to pronounce Buford insane, basing his opinion on the testimony which had been offered. The defense attach great weight to his evidence.

The Yellow Fever.

MEMPHIS, July 15.—The first train on the Little Rock road, since last Friday, left this morning for Lonoke, Ark., to which point the quarantine has been raised.

Judge Ray's son was not so well to-day.

No new cases have been reported. The excitement has entirely subsided. Some few citizens have returned.

Fires.

A fire in the Commercial Place, New Orleans, caused a loss of $30,000. Hill's jewelry establishment, adjoining, was damaged by water. Insured.

LAWRENCE, Ks., July 15.—A fire at 12:30 this morning destroyed Monk's elevator. Loss $15,000; insurance $7,000.

FOREIGN.

Bismarck's Policy.

BERLIN, July 15. The key of Bismarck's present policy toward the Vatican will be found in his recent speech, in which he said it was praiseworthy under certain circumstances to fight a quarrel out to the utter end, but when the ways and means presented themselves of toning down a conflict without affecting the principle at stake, he would not deem himself justified in neglecting such a favorable opportunity. In consequence of the retirement of Dr. Volk from the ministry of ecclesiastical affairs, ecclesiastical laws had been enforced with more leniency, and in this way, they ultimately have the effect of procuring a recognition of the ecclesiastical laws by the Vatican.

Bills have been introduced in the budget for the alteration of those articles of the German constitution by which the legislature must meet and the budget be voted annually, and by which the duration of parliament is fixed at three years. A bill which proposes to substitute biennial meetings of parliament, and biennial budgets, has created considerable sensation, as tending to further the freedom of the government from parliamentary control. A technical reason alleged for the change is the inconvenience of discussing two budgets, Prussian and imperial, in the same year. It was suggested some time ago that they might be taken up in alternate years. The creation of a department for the control of the imperial railways is also regarded as a step towards rendering the government less dependent on parliament.

In Commemoration.

LONDON, July 15.—Mr. The statue of the late Prince Imperial has been placed in Westminster Abbey, and some other memorial erected with the fund contributed by the British army, it has been resolved to devote the surplus of the fund to the establishment of a benevolent institution commemorative of the Prince. It is considered that the army fund alone will amount to £50,000.

The Darien Canal.

ROUEN, FRANCE, July 15.—Monsieur Lesseps in his speech recently, declared that the friendship between France and the United States would facilitate the construction of the Darien canal. He believed the canal would be completed in five or six years. This is less than his former statement of the time necessary for the construction of the work. De Lesseps would have taken a more prudent course if, instead of asking for a subscription of 50,000,000 francs for the canal, he had formed a small preparatory company to make a more complete investigation. Paul Leroy Beaulieu points out that it is not certain that the Nicaragua route would not give the advantages that may hereafter lead to the creation of a second canal which would deprive De Lesseps' enterprise of the trade of the two coasts of the United States, on which it relies for the United States traffic.

Reducing Production.

MANCHESTER, July 15.—Published statistics show a movement for reduction in output is spreading in the cotton districts. In addition to the depression at Blackburn and Oldham, already reported 450,000 spindles at Preston are stopped out of an aggregate of 2,000,000. One quarter of the looms are stopped. At Acrington work is very irregular. Sixty-eight thousand spindles are idle in two mills besides a number of stoppages. In the Leigh district 120,000 are working on short time; 140,000 are stopped. In the Hogling district 74,000 spindles and 1,000 looms are idle.

WASHINGTON NEWS.

Two vessels on the eastern coast, one at New Orleans and four on the lakes, are enlisting boys for the United States Navy.

A sale of 12,000,000 new 4-per-cents has been effected by the First National Bank of New York to J. S. Morgan & Co., of London, at prices equivalent to about 101¼, New York quotations. This closes out the amount taken by the syndicate in April.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES.

The jury in the case of Chastine Cox, for the murder of Mrs. Hull, is completed and the district attorney will open for the prosecution to-morrow.

John Heals, of Baltimore, convicted of the murder of Louis Schmidt in September last, has had his sentence of death commuted to imprisonment for life.

Two hundred puddlers and helpers, of Allentown, Pa., who struck three weeks ago, have resumed work, the company deciding to give an advance of 15 cents per ton.

The Perseverance cotton and woolen yarn mills at Manayunk, operated by Jno. P. Holt & Bro., burned yesterday morning. Loss, $25,000; insurance, $14,000.

The attention of the treasury agent at New York has been directed to an alleged undervaluations of velvets, amounting in some cases to a third of the real value. Special agents are still investigating the undervaluation of silks.

FOREIGN NOTES.

Robert Udall & Son, merchants of Manchester, have failed. Liabilities, £45,000.

The rowing association of Halifax has decided to challenge Warren Ross to row Warner Smith three miles in Bedford Basin for $500 to $1,000 a side.

There are objections to the proposal of the British ambassador, that England act as intermediary with the powers in the settlement of the Greek frontier question.

JOB WORK.

Facilities for Plain and Fancy Job Printing equal to those of any establishment west of the Mississippi River.

The Colorado Post, a new German paper, has appeared in Denver. We have not had the pleasure of reading it as yet.

Lieutenant Cary was in command of a body guard to the Prince Imperial. He neglected his duty and he ought to be cashiered.

Vice President Wheeler does not neglect the oppressed refugee of the south. He volunteers a contribution of $100 to their support.

Harper's Weekly of July 19th has an excellent engraving of the gateway to the Garden of the Gods, engraved from photographs by Granville Perkins.

Jeff Davis says he never knew a southern woman who was reconstructed. We are inclined to think the same remark will apply in the southern man and the northern dough-face.

The jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi are practically complete. Captain Eads, whose daughters are visiting Manitou at the present time, has been eminently successful and has closed a brilliant and useful achievement.

Discussing this point last week, Justice Miller suggested that a receiver be appointed for that portion of the line in dispute so that construction might be continued, and remarked, very aptly, that the public had some right in the matter. But the Denver and Rio Grande management has never conceded that the public or anybody else has any rights. Denver Tribune.

If the Denver Tribune was capable of doing justice in the discussion of this question, it would have acknowledged that the receiver above mentioned was suggested by Hon. L. K. Bass, solicitor for the D. & R. G. Co.

COLORADO COLLEGE.

Colorado College is now before the people as a candidate for popular favor. We know of no institution more deserving of the favors of the truly philanthropic. A college in this city will be the neucleus of culture and literary excellence and every dollar that is expended by our citizens will be invested in a paying enterprise. We know of a college town in Ohio that now derives its business and its importance from the fact that Oberlin College exists there. There is no doubt about the matter, one thousand five hundred college students will furnish the money and the life to any village. The very presence of the intellectual and educated faculty is a blessing to any city. And the youthful enthusiasm of a body of young men and women seeking learning for learning's sake will be of uncalculable value to the city so fortunate as to secure their presence.

It is not necessary for us to say much in favor of Colorado College. Our citizens are alive to the value of this institution. An unsectarian school of learning in our community is worth everything, and we are sure such a school will receive a hearty following.

THE PRINCE IMPERIAL.

Lieutenant Cary, who led the party of which the Prince Imperial was a member, has been court-martialed for his cowardly conduct on that occasion. A searching investigation of Lieutenant Cary's conduct has been demanded, and it appears that the prince went out not as one of Lord Chelms- [illegible] army, but he went out as a guest of the English army. The men who accompanied him were really a body-guard. The New York Tribune says that "the district in which he was killed was so dreaded by the English commander that he allowed men to be killed in it and remain unburied weeks rather than to risk a detachment to recover their bodies. Yet this prince, with a few men, was sent into it with no especial caution for his safety. Cary and his men galloped off not, looking behind, apparently, to see whether the poor lad was being murdered by two or twenty assassins.

"The whole affair is disgraceful to the English valor and the English hospitality, both of which are outraged enough to make the punishment of the offender tolerably certain."

This is the Tribune's severe comment carried to the extremest verge. We do not care to comment at length on the unfortunate affair. Lieutenant Cary may have some arguments to show that his conduct under the circumstances was justifiable. The Lieutenant was in command of a party, and the greatest safety to the greatest number may have directed his movements.

The boy who was butchered by the savages will not be remembered the less kindly because he was a prince who set his spear in rest to win a lady whom he loved.

THE GRAND CANON DECISION.

There is still some doubt in the minds of many whether the D. & R. G. Co are to have the right of location all the way to Leadville. The following extract from the remarks of Judge Hallett when the circuit court issued the order of Monday is sufficiently explicit on this point:

"Now it is alleged, I know, in this case the Rio Grande company against the Pueblo and Arkansas Valley company, which relates to the line above the twentieth mile post and proved also, that the Pueblo and Arkansas Valley company made the first location and first began work—that is they were first in the field; and that may be conceded from the evidence as it now stands. But even if the Rio Grande company had prior right at the point of beginning, which was down at Canon City, or at the mouth of Grand Canon, it would relate to all the line, because when one company secures a right to locate a line along these mountains it cannot be said that the other company by going a few days or weeks in advance of them can secure a prior right. The right to begin is the right to go on. If it is true that one might step in just in advance of the other and purchase, then the right to begin would be valueless. If we should say that the Rio Grande company has the one right to begin, and no further right, we should in effect grant them nothing, because considered in, and by itself taken separate from the rest of the line, the right to build to the twentieth mile post is no right of any value whatever, for that reason the decision of the supreme court as to the right to begin at Canon City and to build in the Grand Canon is a declaration that they may go on, that they have the better and first right to locate their line clear through to Leadville, because the line must be taken as a whole and considered as a whole, and so we say that the fact, which may be taken to be proved, that the Pueblo and Arkansas Valley company was first in the field, and to locate its line and begin work above the twentieth mile post is not controlling. If the Rio Grande company has the better right to the Grand Canon, it has the same better right all the way to Leadville. That being true, and it being established that the Rio Grande company has declared its purpose to locate its line on the north side of the river, the further question remains as to what shall be done with respect to the work which was done pending the appeal in the supreme court the work in the Grand Canon and above and on towards Leadville. If that in the Grand Canon was under the sanction of the court the right which was thus adjudged to them might well give rise to the opinion, might well induce the Pueblo and Arkansas Valley company to believe that they had the same right to go on beyond that point and build their road and say if payment is to be made for any part of this line it is to be made for the whole; if for the line from Canon City westward it is for the whole line on towards Leadville, so far as it shall be used or appropriated by the Rio Grande company."

WEDNESDAY, JULY 16, 1879

Blouses in a Ball-Room.

"The Assommoir" has reached its hundredth night. It is a dramatic event, but there are so many events just now that perhaps it may be as well to explain. It is the great naturalistic play of the period, as the book on which it is founded is the great naturalistic romance. What is naturalism? The art of being natural—a simple thing, you will say, but in the hands of a gifted Frenchman a theory admitting of wondrous developments. Thus in "The Assommoir" M. Emile Zola has painted low society to the life, or rather to the death. He has given us the most startlingly awful picture of the black slums of this great town ever done in black and white. It is unreadable, and of course it is universally read. Zola is the man of the hour, and it will not be his fault if he is not the man of the epoch. He is trying to found a school. Be naturalistic or nothing, he says to painter and actor, as well as to writer. Tell the very truth in all its horror or you will never be sharp enough to see it in all its beauty. Classicism is dead; Romanticism is dying. Naturalism is the infant heir. The painters have taken his advice, and we have the impressionist school; the dramatists have taken it, and the play of the "Assommoir," which has now filled the coffers of the Ambigu for 100 nights, is the result. It is a sensible play. I defy you to look on a certain scene of death from drunkard's softening of the brain without getting off your liquor for four and twenty hours.

The hundredth night of a Parisian play is generally celebrated by a supper of the company. It was felt that something new should be done in this instance in honor of the new school. Let Classicism and Romanticism sup—Naturalism would give a costume ball, and a costume ball like no other, a travesty of low life. The card of invitation was in the form of an etching of a dirty wine cooper in patched apron and wooden shoes, who held a smaller card in his hand thus inscribed—of course in French:

On the occasion of the centenary of "The Assommoir," the authors of the piece and the management of the theatre of the Ambigu have the honor to invite to the ball which will be given at the Elysee Montmartre on the 29th of April at midnight.

One will crack a crust.
Gentlemen as workmen.
Ladies as washerwomen.

These cards were sent out right and left to all the great theatres of Paris, to the studios, and to the salons. It was understood that for one night only a good part of the most polished society of the capital was to adopt the dress, speech and manners of a barrier ball. The very scene of the revel was a low dancing hall on the exterior boulevards, in the Clichy quarter. It is described in the novel and represented in the play as the scene of the death of Gervaise, the drunkard's wife. She perishes of cold and want in the snow before the door. The students and counter-jumpers who frequent the place danced there as usual up to 11:30 on Tuesday night, then the police hurried them out to make room for M. Zola's guests. A great refreshment counter was set up where you could have the very best of things from Brebault's in the very roughest style. Everything was to be in keeping, you see it was a rough's ball. The wine was poured out of filthy looking pewter measures, just as in the small dram-shops. There was plenty of pate de foie gras, but it was in lumps like boulders and sandwiched between hunks of bread as thick as your fist. At 12 all was ready and the first sham workmen arrived, while the real ones, who happened to be night wanderers on that part of the boulevard, formed a crowd at the door.

Some of the invited had compromised the matter by putting a blouse over their evening dress but most of them were frankly and unmistakably voyou from top to toe. There were tremendous makes-up in every external characteristic of low class debauchery, folly and crime. Here was the rough of the outer boulevards who steals behind you on tip-toe at night, whips a knife in between your shoulder blades and then borrows your watch—short blue blouse, greasy black silk cap with a very high crown, "No. 6" curls plastered flat on the brow. The man with the rather longer blouse, coquettish cut about the pantaloons, highly polished boots, clean hands, white face, long almond-like cunning eyes, a flower stalk between his clean shaven lips, lives wholly without work, even without so much off it as is involved in doing murder—others work for him. Salute Infamy in Profundis and let him pass on. The white bloused fellow is a bill sticker also, but this only in real life, the most brilliant student of declamation the [illegible] years. The brawny fellow in shirt sleeves and a leathern apron is a blacksmith and a very distinguished counsel. The little man in the striped cotton night cap and high pantaloons is his bellows-blower. Nothing near so perfect as this little fellows's make-up and nothing more hideous. He has stained his arms brown and made himself as hairy as a badger or worse. He looks like some narrow chested gorilla who has stolen a bather's clothes. By and by he will go up into the gallery and light electric matches, and look down on us through his thicket of locks, with eyes all afire with excitement, outglaring the glare. In private life he collects shells and coins and medals, and is generally to be found feeding the sparrows of mornings in the Tuileries. That first-rate house painter, with cleanliness for his only fault, is the artist Clairin, who went up in the balloon with Sarah Bernhardt, and is that lady's very good friend. The old, battered invalide is another painter, Jules Dupre. The zinc-smith is Rochard; his mate, Dick de Lonlay. One of the printers is Gervex the painter. The sewer man is Edouard Philippe, a bit of a dandy in real life. Place aux dames! Here come the washerwomen, with Rene Luguet at their head, some of them carrying the short wooden bat with which they beat the linen. Angele is, I suppose, a washerwoman bride. It is not a moment too soon to judge of her appearance. I must not say more. Her happy thought is the success of the evening. Oh these French! By and by we shall have Blanche Pierson, Gabrielle Gauthier, Kalb, Leonide Leblanc, all trying to outdo one another as houris of the bask slums. As yet it is a little too early for that; the theatres are closed, but their companies have hardly had time to effect the double change of costume and to drive here. Meanwhile we may continue our analysis of the crowd which, among the men, contains not a few well known in the best French society. The tall white-haired man with the blouse thrown over his dress suit is the Russian novelist Tourguenieff. Prince Galitzin is hard by; Belot, the novelist, Detaille, the great military painter, swell the throng. The sentimental dandy in complete evening wear, without so much as the affectation of disguise, is Francois Coppee, the poet. Here is a lad why he has not come in travesty. "So I have." "In what character?" "A tavern waiter." Many men have done the same thing, not taking the notice on the card au serieux. Rene de Pont Jest is in full Court costume of the time of Louis XVI. There is a scream of derision when he comes in. But all eyes are soon turned to another figure—a burly bourgeois of middle height, with short scribby beard, turn up nose and large expanse of forehead crowned by spare locks, though he is still short of middle age. It is Emile Zola, the founder of the school. And these 1,500 dancing mad men are supposed to be his disciples—what a thought! He, too, is in plain evening wear. He hates this and almost all other amusements, and so he slips away.

Now the theatres pour in their large contingent. The greater the actor, as a rule, the meaner his travesty. Dupuis of the Varietes is a pork butcher's boy. And here comes the guests of the evening, "The Assommoir" lot, not altogether but in twos and threes. They wear the costumes of the piece. The middle-aged man with the intelligent face, who is trying to talk to half a dozen people at the same time—a feat even for a Frenchman—is Gil Naza, who plays Coupeau, the leading part. Just one hour ago he was dying of delirium tremens at the Ambigu, a horrible death. (He walked the mad house hospitals for three weeks during the rehearsals of the piece.) He had the fancy that black beetles were crawling all over him and after a vain convulsive effort to keep them off his face with nervous twitching fingers emaciated into claws he bounded from the floor in terror and fell back a corpse. This pale woman with the delicate features and charming refined expression is Coupeau's wife, Gervaise, otherwise the famous actress Helene Petit. At a still later period of the evening than her husband, Gervaise was perishing of cold and hunger, as I have already explained, before the Elysee Montmartre. Yet here she is at the Elysee Montmartre once more, and certainly in no risk of dying of hunger for a look at that pile of provisions on the sideboard, and as for dying of cold, a Hottentot would never have the coolness to do that in this atmosphere of a Turkish bath. A loving arm had lifted the poor frail form out of the gutter and is now encircling it in a very lively waltz. Gervaise wears the blue merino dress and cotton gloves in which she was married at the Ambigu. Her rival, "big Virginie," is just engaging herself for the quadrille—Virginie with whom she has that Homeric battle in the wash-house—the two drenching each other with buckets of real hot water on the stage, and tearing a real chemise a night off each other's backs, regardless of expense. Delessart wears the shop made Sunday suit of working class swelldom, which was helped to make him irresistible with the women of Lantier the villain of the play. Mme. Boche, the concierge, is in her frightful frock of Scotch plaid. Mes Bottes and Bibi-la Grillade, those animated sinks for the rinsings of all the wine pots of their quarter, are there to the very life of the scene.

It is 2 o'clock and we are in the thick of it—dancing as only the French can dance, vilely as to the step, but with the energy of men possessed. It is not easy to imagine anything more grotesque. Grave men holding positions of honor in the professions and in society find the memory of their student days revived and fool it for "one night only," as they fooled it five and seventy years ago at Bullier and la Reine Blanche. The women dance quite decently, all but a few who are the scourings of the ballet and who soon show that they have little to assume to fit them for the parts of rag-pickers and vaudeviseuses. The gathering is as select as possible, but there are some exceptions—persons whom it is quite superfluous to plate with vulgarity, as they are of that metal all through. By 3 the quieter people have had enough of it; by 4 the mere acting is all over and it is a real rag-picker's ball. The refreshment counter has been twice cleared and now they are frying potatoes in a huge pan to satisfy the still ravenous crowd. They sing and shout the accompaniment as the band plays popular airs. Every possible variety of travestied thief, loafer, laborer and virtuous mechanic dances every possible variety of the cancan. The daylight peeps in reproachfully on the steaming, dusty crew, the little gorilla trying to stare it out of countenance by the light of his electric match. It is Pandemonium, with every devil doing as he dam pleases, and thus we all celebrate the new literary worship of nature according to the French rite.

Richard Whiteing in New York World.

Carlyle and Burns.

Men who were young a generation ago, and who then read Carlyle, have the great advantage of having been familiar in their plastic and susceptible years with one of the noblest pleas that one man of genius ever made for another, in Carlyle's essay upon Burns. They were countrymen, one born as the other died. Both had the deep, strong, melancholy nature which is nurtured by the misty coasts and solitary mountains and moors of Scotland. Both, too, had the immense vitality, the Berserker humor, the thorough-manliness, of the Northern genius. As one reads the works of Carlyle, and marks his impatience of shams, and effeminacy, and equivocation, and conventional moralities, and hears his loud satiric laughter dying into a wail of pathos and entreaty, it is easy to feel that he saw the sound hearty man he longs and prays for gone astray in Robert Burns. Such sweetness and grace and strength and tenderness! Such soft, pathetic, penetrating melody, as if the sadness of shaggy Scotland had found a voice! Such roistering jovial humor, excessive, daring, unbridled!—a charm so universal that it drew men from their beds in taverns at midnight to listen, delighted, until dawn. Here was a fullness of simple, native massive manhood, not trained by the schools, not manipulated by the dancing master and the professor of single-stick, overflowing bounds, shocking the proprieties, defying the rules, guilty of offenses that cannot be excused, and for which he paid the penalty. It fascinated and captivated the sad, grim, infinitely tender and manly and pure genius of Carlyle, and he has interpreted, as no other man has essayed to interpret, the wild, wistful, touching, and tragical story of Robert Burns.—Editor's Easy Chair in Harper's Magazine for August.

The berrying season has just commenced.

Common building brick are worth $9.00 per thousand.

Milk is only worth five cents a quart in Colorado Springs.

Mrs Florence and family are out berrying on Rock Creek.

Nice fresh apples and plums appeared in our markets yesterday.

No better time to visit Pike's Peak than during this warm weather.

The freight teams have by no means disappeared from our streets.

Don't fail to notice that fine cut of Bacon & Son's livery stable on our second page.

A party of excursionists from Springfield, Ohio, is expected to arrive in this city to-morrow.

Pike's Peak and the bare ridge to the westward were white with snow after a thunder shower last evening.

The Board of County Commissioners will meet next Monday to complete the unfinished business of the last session.

Among the many improvements now taking place in the city, is a neat fence being built by Dr. Smith around his property on Huerfano street and Wahsatch avenue.

The guests at the Manitou House enjoyed a German last evening. The toilettes of the ladies were particularly elegant. It was the most successful affair of the season.

The feast of lanterns for the benefit of Colorado College will take place on the evening of July 29. This is the anniversary of the eclipse, and also of the last college festival.

We print to day a communication from Dr. Adams of this city on epidemics and their causes. The article has been somewhat condensed, but the line of argument has not been broken.

One of the finest improvements to a residence lot in town is the handsome iron fence lately put up, inclosing Mr. J. E. Wheeler's property, on the corner of Pike's Peak and Nevada avenues.

Thirteen guests left the Beebee House, Manitou, yesterday, for other points. Their places however were more than filled by the arrival of ten on the morning train, and a coach load at four in the afternoon.

Look out for something new and interesting in the furniture business shortly. Macomber & Potter have just received four car loads of furniture, embracing everything that can be desired in that line. Their advertisement will be forthcoming in a few days.

One of the most noticeable features just now, at the depot in this city, is the fact that crowds of travelers pour out of the cars on to the platform, while but few enter the train. Cars which arrive well filled depart nearly empty, while the coaches, busses and other vehicles for this city and Manitou are filled to overflowing.

People living on Commercial street complain bitterly of the debauchery and carousals that are carried on nightly, especially about midnight, when honest folks should be in bed. We see no remedy but to form vigilant committees, snatch the offenders and punish them by ducking or any other method that might be practical and effective. Trinidad News.

Personal.

We regret to learn that Dr. Coombs is ill.

Dr. Huntington, of the Lake House, Pike's Peak trail, was in the city yesterday.

Mr. J. Q. A. Campbell, editor of the Bellefontaine Republican, went north last evening.

General Charles Adams, special mail agent, arrived on the train from the north yesterday.

Several members of the Chaffee Light Artillery, of Denver, were on the train going south yesterday.

Lafe. Pence and Ad. Arnold, of the Daily Democrat, Columbus, Indiana, are stopping at the Cliff House.

A party of three gentlemen, Messrs. Bolton, Florance and Hafner, start to-day for a three weeks' trip in the mountains.

Mr. E. C. Bartlett, the enterprising blacksmith of west Huerfano street, went to Denver last evening for a stay of a few days.

Mr. J. R. Kennedy and wife started last Monday on a pleasure trip into the mountains, intending to go as far as Leadville. During their absence the institute premises will be in charge of Mr. H. M. Harlan.

Mr. William Varley, of this city, came in on last evening's coach from Leadville. Mr. Varley is largely interested in mines in the carbonate camp.

Hon. J. J. Russell, one of the ablest attorneys of northwestern Iowa, with his wife and little girl, are at present stopping with Captain Yerger, in this city. Mr. Russell is looking for a place to locate and go into business, and starts for Leadville in a short time.

Mr. Charles L. Beckurts, son of the proprietor of the Denver Tribune, has won additional honors at the Military Institute at Lexington, Va., at which institute he is a student. At the annual examination just closed the young gentleman passed second in a class of forty cadets and was deprived of first honors by a fraction only. He was promoted from sergeant to lieutenant, making the third advancement in rank in three years. Mr. Beckurts expects his son home in a few weeks.

A New Lumber Yard.

Messrs. Steiger & Bro. have secured a lot adjoining the Cumberland Presbyterian church, on North Tejon street, and have established a lumber yard. They intend to handle both Chicago and native lumber, and all the materials used in building. These gentlemen have been engaged in the lumber business in Cameron, Mo., and other points in that state for years, in fact now have two yards running there, and with their wide experience cannot fail to succeed here. The business at this place will be under the immediate supervision of the senior member of the firm, who brought his family with him and hopes to make Colorado Springs his home. Consult their advertisement in another column.

A Good Barn.

Charley Woodring, one of the most popular brick layers in the city, has the walls of his new barn, on the corner of Pike's Peak avenue and Corona street, well under way.

The dimensions of the building are 24x62 feet. The walls, which are of brick, and one foot thick, will be nine feet high for the first story and six feet for the second. The loft will have a capacity of ten tons of hay. When completed this will be the finest private barn in the city, and with the neat little brick cottage lately finished, makes Mr. Woodring's property one of the pleasantest and most desirable in the city.

The Larks Once More.

Last evening the Larks made their second appearance in this city. The audience was not what ought to have greeted this model company, in fact it was very thin indeed. The performance opened with the farce "A Cup of Tea," which was well played by all. The entertainment concluded with the exceedingly comical burlesque opera of "Hot Water." It is needless for us to comment on this play, as it was a very happy production. They give their last performance this evening, when they will present an entire change of programme, concluding with the best play of their repertoire, entitled "Antics." The price of admission has been reduced to seventy-five cents for reserved seats and fifty cents general admission. Everybody should go and enjoy a really excellent entertainment.

Epidemics and their Causes.

Our planet is virtually a prodigious dynamical engine, dependent for its source of power upon the same principles involved in the construction of all preternatural engines built and controlled by man. The equatorial regions of our planet are the boilers of this terrestrial heat engine, and the poles are its condensers, and this engine proceeds to work by conveying hot air from the equator to the poles or cold parts. The sun shines directly upon the tropics, and this heated air, as in the case of an ordinary fire, ascends to the top of the atmosphere and is replaced by cold air blowing in from the poles. Thus we have a cold current of air continually blowing in from the poles to the equator along the ground, and, on the other hand, the heated air finds its way through the upper regions of the atmosphere from the equator to the poles.

There is also high above the earth, a stratum of highly attenuated air, which is extremely cold, and heat is constantly being carried from the warm moist air next the ground to this cold air in the higher regions.

There exist, therefore, warm moist ascending currents and cold dry descending currents, which process often so cools the atmosphere as to condense the aqueous vapor therein contained, which, in turn, becomes deposited in the form of rain, hail, or snow, thus constituting another analogy between the earth engine and an ordinary engine, which pumps back the cold water from the condenser to the boiler; for in the case of the earth engine, the ground forms its boiler and the upper regions its condenser.

There are two appliances, however, in an ordinary engine for producing equalization of motion; these are respectively, the "governor" and the "fly wheel; these two produce smoothness of action.

In this respect the earth engine is apparently deficient, but this conclusion is reached only upon superficial observation; for in reality the earth engine is endowed with what subserves the purpose of both these contrivances, viz: an inter-planetary action.

But you will doubtless ask what produces this irregularity of action then, the periods of calm which are so frequently and suddenly broken by thunder showers, terrific tempests, tornadoes, cyclones, electrical and magnetic disturbances, &c., &c., and this constitutes the particular point to which I call your attention, inasmuch as it brings us to a consideration of that luminary (the sun) which is the principal influencing mass of our system.

This celestial body, although so far distant from our earth that it would require nearly three hundred years for a locomotive running at full speed to reach it, exercises an extensive and powerful influence over our planet. Not only all our meteorological disturbances are controlled by the sun, but all magnetic phenomena are regulated by it. And, in connection with the moon, it incites the diurnal exaserbations of our waters. But, above all, it arouses into action, and sustains the life of the animal and vegetable kingdom. Deprive vegetation of this stimulus, by eliminating the actinic rays of the sun, which govern vegetation, and you produce death and decay. This, of itself, naturally reverts upon animal organisms, and, in course of time, produces disease and ultimate death in them. For it is the vegetable kingdom which, by its very life, utilizes the waste and effete matter thrown off by the animal kingdom, and in the course of its processes reconverts it into life-giving materials which are, in turn, consumed by the animal kingdom.

Is it then to be wondered at that the sun's regular and irregular changes or celestial phenomena in general should so materially influence life? Let us see what these changes in the sun are, and whether or no they occur with any periodicity, and if so, endeavor to trace by simply an observation of facts any connection which may exist between these solar phenomena and organic disturbances of either the vegetable or animal matter of our globe. The sun, although not possessed of equatorial currents like the earth, is also a heat engine, and has rising and descending currents similar to ours. These currents are much stronger in the sun's atmosphere than in ours, obviously because of the more intense heat of the sun's surface and its correspondingly greater magnitude. Astonishing as it may seem these solar currents have a velocity of at least forty miles per second, which is much stronger than our strongest hurricanes.

These currents carry up with them a vapor, not aqueous, but of heated metals, such as iron and magnesium. They, like our aqueous vapor, when they reach a higher and colder region, are condensed and formed into clouds, which subsequently return to the sun's surface. Mark then, in this instance also, the analogy between this celestial engine and our terrestial engine. Inasmuch, then, as the sun is self-luminous, this celestial rain or hail appears darker than the bright parts of the sun, which are not cold. Hence the mottled appearance of the sun. Besides this mottled appearance, the sun presents dark spots, or patches, which are known to astronomers as the "sun spots," and also bright spots or lines, the "faculæ" of the sun. These faculæ are determined to be ascending columns of bright and hot matter, thrown up in the atmosphere of the sun from its surface. In the center of the sun the faculæ are not to be distinguished, for here, the sun itself is so bright as to throw them into obscurity; but at the periphery of the sun, they may readily be observed, because here they are projected against a cold and dark background. Thus we prove then, that the faculæ are bright matter of currents thrown up into the air of the sun; and this accounts for the changes of luminosity. These faculæ are observed and studied during the few precious moments of a total eclipse, and they have been determined by spectroscopic analysis to be masses of hydrogen, which seem to play the same part in the solar atmosphere that oxygen and nitrogen do in ours; and besides that, they sometimes contain the vapors of iron, sodium, or magnesium, which are carried up by the ascending currents into the sun's atmosphere. Sometimes the faculæ assume very beautiful shapes, as for instance, the figure of a gigantic fiery tree, whose top seems to be a hundred thousand miles above the surface of the sun, and whose branches seem to grow at the rate of forty miles a second.

Just as the bright spots or faculæ represent prominences or ascending columns of red hot matter, so the dark patches or spots to which I have previously referred, represent enormous chasms, sometimes three or four thousand miles deep. These caverns, or "sun spots," have sloping sides, which present a somewhat more bright appearance than the bottom, and are hence termed the "penumbra" or partial shadow, while the dark bottom is termed the "umbra," or whole shadow. There are, therefore, three gradations of light to a "sun spot" the bright surface of the sun the less bright sloping sides, and the black bottom.

These sun spots are continually undergoing metamorphoses—breaking down and being reformed—and these physical changes mark the occurrence of enormous storms upon the sun's surface. This sun engine, as it were, is always working very powerfully, and, no doubt, in the case of the "sun spot," we see the cooled matter or cloud which is falling down, down, down until it reaches a region sufficiently hot to melt it; for the sun, you must remember, is not a solid body, like the earth. Now these great disturbances, or solar storms, occur within the equatorial regions, and never at the poles, just as in terrestial equatorial regions we have great cyclones and hurricanes. Here, then, is another analogy between the sun and the earth.

The number of these storms in a given time is constantly changing; during some years there are but few, during others, a great many. And there is a periodicity about the time for the occurrence of the minimum and maximum number.

When there is the maximum number there is the minimum of actinic rays, which we have before observed to be so prolific in furthering vegetation and chemical changes in plants, and this naturally reflects the influence upon the animal kingdom. Here, probably, is a clue to the relation existing between terrestrial sanitary conditions and solar disturbances. The maximum years recur at intervals of about eleven years, and these years bear a peculiar relationship and coincide almost perfectly with the years in which have occurred our great epidemics, influencing either the animal or vegetable kingdoms, or both.

An example of this is found in the fact that what were called the "good wine years" in Germany coincided with the years of minimium "sun spots."

There is also a peculiar relationship between the positions of the planets, particularly Venus and Mercury, and the behavior of these "sun spots." The maximum number occurring at that particular part of the sun furthest from those planets. In view of the fact, therefore, that there is a connection between the positions and actions of the planets, it is no more than submission to the laws of logic to premise the converse.

"Magnetic disturbances," outbreaks of the Aurora Borealis and australis, cyclones, hurricanes and the earth's connection currents are all subservient to the sun's changes, and coincide with the maximum "sun spot" periods. The earth, therefore, is very seriously affected by what takes place in the sun; they work together, and are companions in their irregularities; what affects one, therefore, implicates and affects the other.

And now that we have seen how variable are the number of "sun spots," and how regular the variation and determined the interval between one season of maximum abundance and the next, and have seen the connection of this periodicity, to the rain fall, the winds, the magnetic and electrical disturbances of our earth, let me present a few facts in support of the conjecture, that there is also a coincidence in the sanitary conditions of our planet and solar disturbances.

Almost all vegatable and animal epidemics occur near, or during the time of maximum "sun spots." The best known vegetable epidemic is the potatoe disease. The years 1816, 1860 and 1872 were bad years for it, and these years coincide very nearly with the years of maximum "sun spots." If, as is supposed, these diseases are excited by means of germs propagated in and carried about by the atmosphere, any disturbance of the latter will facilitate the generation of these germs. The "sweating sickness," or the "black death," which occurred about three centuries since, that is, in the following years: 1485, 1506, 1517, 1578, and 1551, about a period of eleven years intervening between the outbreaks, coincided exactly with the "sun spot" period. This is determined by the "fires in the air," and "fighting armies," which are chronicled as having occurred about those times in great abundance, and which are the aurorae boreali of the ancients. During these periods there was also great devastation throughout vegetable life, in consequence of a peculiar fungus growth which attached itself to a great variety of farinaceous vegetation; and which was, even in those dark ages, believed to contract the capillaries and thus "dog up" the circulation.

Lack of space obliges me to close with simply the calling of your attention to the numerous epidemics which have occurred lately, both in our own and European and Asiatic countries, and the significant fact that we are bordering on the maximum "sun spot" period.
